Optimal Treatment Strategies for Advanced Heart Failure

Westin Kierland Resort & Spa
Scottsdale, Arizona
Friday – Saturday
February 24-25, 2012

Course Highlights:

• Update on biomarkers in heart failure
• A practical approach to sleep apnea in heart failure
• Role of mechanical circulatory support in advanced heart failure
• Stem cell therapy in heart failure: fact versus fiction
• Treatment of pulmonary arterial hypertension for the cardiologist
• Treatment of special populations with decompensated heart failure
COURSE HIGHLIGHTS

This is the only course of its kind offered by Mayo Clinic in the Scottsdale/Phoenix area for the treatment of advanced heart failure. Advanced heart failure is a constellation of symptoms resulting in overall poor organ perfusion and ultimately premature death. This course will provide insight into the diagnosis as well as the acute and chronic management of this most devastating disease process. The course will feature experts both locally and nationally in order to enhance the education experience of the attendees.

COURSE LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Upon completion of this course, participants should be able to:

- Illustrate ideal management of surgical treatment of shock
- Examine patient selection for mechanical circulatory support
- Compare the current limitations for surgical versus percutaneous revascularization
- Examine ideal patient selection for percutaneous repair of valvular heart disease
- Identify the state-of-the-art surgical and medical approached to acutely decompensated heart failure
- Review appropriate utilization of ICD and resynchronization therapy in heart failure management
- Conclude surgical and medical limitations and treatment options for atrial fibrillation
- Analyze state-of-the-art treatment approaches for patients with variable clinical presentations of acutely decompensated heart failure as it relates to mechanical circulatory support, cardiac transplantation, resynchronization therapy, pulmonary arterial hypertension and high-risk cardiovascular surgery.

INTENDED AUDIENCE

Internists, cardiologists, intensivists, cardiothoracic surgeons, surgical mid-levels, cardiology midlevels, perfusionists, critical care nurses and cardiovascular fellows in training.
