As we enter the new millennium, it is evident that classification, diagnosis and treatment of neurodegenerative diseases are experiencing more advances than ever before. New disease management methods in this field are paving the way towards more effective and unified treatment strategies. This course will focus on three primary types of neurodegenerative disorders: Parkinson’s Disease, Alzheimer’s Disease, and Motorneuron Disease, in addition to some “atypical” syndromes. A combination format of presentations and panel discussions will offer comprehensive coverage of their individual diagnosis and treatment, as well as touch on their overlapping symptoms and approach. The intended audience for this course is the primary care practitioner, internist, and neurologist. Likewise, the clinical neuropsychologist, who may evaluate patients with these type of diseases, will find this intermediate level program to be of value for their fundamental diagnosis and treatment guidelines of such neurodegenerative afflictions.

Upon completion of this course, participants should be able to:

• Differentiate between the various neurodegenerative disorders and identify their respective treatments.
• Explain the pros and cons of medical and surgical treatment options for Parkinson’s disease and tremors.
• Distinguish between common and unusual forms of Parkinsonism.
• Identify the characteristics of dementia subtypes.
• Compare the various treatment options of Dementia.
• Explain the diagnosis strategy and treatment of motor neuron disease.

Attendance at this Mayo course does not indicate nor guarantee competence or proficiency in the performance of any procedures which may be discussed or taught in this course.
